I'll work with UPND, says Iris Kaingu

By Alex Maboshe

Newly elected Mwandu Member of Parliament Iris Kaingu says her independent status will not prevent her from working with President Hakainde Hichilema and the ruling administration.

Speaking in an interview, Ms Kaingu emphasized that political differences should not hinder national development, noting the distinct roles of the executive and legislative branches.

"President Hakainde Hichilema is President for all Zambians, and he deserves the respect that his office requires," Ms Kaingu said.

"He is the head of the executive, and I am part of the legislature. So we will have to work together."

Kaingu, whose father, Michael Kaingu, previously served two terms as Mwandu MP secured her seat as an independent after an unsuccessful 2021 bid under the PF ticket.

She outlined plans to use her first 100 days in office to establish a phased strategy addressing Mwandu's pressing challenges.

She said she will expand access to clean water for residents and livestock, and improving healthcare facilities.

Upgrade school buildings, roads, and extending mobile network coverage to the 70 percent of the district currently without service and also tap into local agriculture and timber resources to boost the area's economy.

President Elect Hakainde Hichilema has urged United Party for National Development (UPND) members and their partners not to provoke supporters of candidates who were unsuccessful in the just ended general election.

Mr Hichilema said elections should never be characterised by fighting and bloodshed, but should instead be viewed as a competition to serve the people through public office.

He said his administration would not discriminate against citizens based on how they voted, assuring that every Zambian would receive an equal share of the country's development.

President Hichilema further assured the nation that the Government would defend and protect every citizen from any attempts to destabilise Zambia's peace and security.

He said militia behaviour and related schemes were alien to Zambia, warning that his administration would do everything possible to protect the country's sovereignty and uphold law and order.

Speaking during his acceptance speech after being re-elected as Zambia's President, President Hichilema thanked Zambians for renewing his mandate and for conducting themselves peacefully before, during and after the elections.

The Head of State also thanked God for preserving peace in the country and commended citizens for demonstrating political maturity by exercising their democratic rights.

He said democracy allowed citizens to choose leaders in a civilized manner, adding that once elected, leaders had a responsibility to serve all citizens fairly, regardless of their political affiliation.

President Hichilema cited free education, increased Constituency Development Fund allocations and debt restructuring as some of the measures implemented by his administration during its first term.

He said debt restructuring had created savings of about 1.9 billion United States dollars annually, which the Government had applied towards free education, CDF and other social programmes.

The President said the next five years would focus on economic growth through investment, job creation and increased business opportunities.

He urged Zambians to embrace hard work and increase local production, particularly in agriculture, saying the country could not depend solely on trading and imports.

President Hichilema appealed to citizens to celebrate the election results responsibly and avoid provoking opponents or damaging property.

“Those who did not vote for you are not your enemies. They are your brothers, sisters and fellow citizens,” he said.

He warned against the emergence of armed militias and gun-related political violence, saying such conduct was unacceptable and had no place in Zambia.

The President said peace, justice and the rule of law were essential for national development, adding that the Government would defend the country's peace, uphold the Constitution and safeguard democracy.

He called on Zambians to remain united under the national motto, “One Zambia, One Nation, One People,” saying

Kasonde Mwenda rejects election results

Edu PS testifies in forgery case

By Luyando Mukuka

Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Education (Administration), Norian Muneku, has told the Ndola Magistrate Court how a 41-year-old man allegedly forged her signature and used fake recruitment letters to recruit prospective teachers in Ndola.

Blessings Sinyangwe of Northrise Township is facing one count of forgery, uttering false documents and obtaining money by false pretences.

The forged letters are alleged to have been authored and signed by senior officials from the Ministry of Education headquarters in Lusaka and the Copperbelt Provincial offices between 2018 and June 2026.

When the matter came up before Magistrate Sumson Mumba for continuation of trial, Ms Muneku told the court that on July 26, 2026, she received a phone call from an informer who told her that he had come across four letters bearing forged signatures of herself and another official.

Ms Muneku said that upon receiving the information, she advised the informer to report the matter to police, which he did.

She said that sometime later, a police officer went to her office in Lusaka with the four purported recruitment letters.

Ms Muneku told the court that after examining the letters, she discovered that the signatures were not hers and that the documents did not resemble normal letters issued by the Ministry of Education because such letters are supposed to bear the initials of the person who typed them.

“When I sign, there are copies that remain at the Ministry of education which include at the Human Resource department. So I asked if there were letters that remained at the ministry of education of which we did not find,” she said.

Ms Muneku further told the court that genuine recruitment letters from the Ministry of Education are supposed to contain a Teaching Service (T'S) number.

She gave an example of such identification as “Mary Zulu number 50” and emphasised that even the handwriting appearing on the letters was not hers.

“There was a letter for Uniece Mutoba, Ireen Banda and two letters for Mwinga Chimunya. The original Copy is always with the person who has been transferred or employed which was not the case in this matter,” she said.

Trial continues in the matter.

NRPUP gave us a good run – Hamududu

By Alex Maboshe

UPND Alliance Member Highvie Hamududu has confessed that the National Reconciliation Party for Unity and Prosperity-NRPUP- gave the UPND a good run in the just ended general election.

Speaking when he featured on phoenix FM's Tuesday's edition of Let the People Talk Programme m, Mr. Hamududu said the party's performance was commendable, considering that it was formed only a month before the election campaign period.

He said the fact that NRPUP, despite being a newly formed party, managed to mount a strong challenge against the ruling party demonstrates that its members worked hard.

Mr. Hamududu has since urged members of the ruling party to embrace members of the losing opposition and work together to move the country forward.

He has also called on political party supporters to stop fighting on behalf of their leaders, noting that political leaders interact and eat together despite belonging to different parties.

On the same programme, Governance Expert Isaac Mwanza urged all the aggrieved losing candidates in the election not to incite their members to go to the streets but should seek redress through the courts of law.

Immigration officer detained

By Ruth Kambita
A Senior Immigration Officer stationed at Harry Mwaanga Nkumbula International Airport has been detained for allegedly attempting to irregularly facilitate the exit of Lusaka lawyer Jonas Zimba from Zambia.

Southern Province Police Commanding Officer Moo-

no Namalongo said police acted on intelligence received on the night of August 16, 2026, that some people had arrived at Victoria Falls Border Post and intended to cross into Zimbabwe.

Among those said to have arrived were Masheke Masheke, 39, a senior immigration officer based at Harry Mwaanga Nkumbula International Airport, Jonas

Zimba, a Lusaka-based lawyer, and two other people. They were travelling in a silver Mercedes-Benz, registration number AJG 1731.
Mr Namalongo said

Mr Masheke entered the border post building to facilitate clearance of the motor vehicle and allegedly stamped a Zambian passport that had not been scanned into the system and without lawful authority.

He said the move prompted a customs officer to carry out a physical inspection of the vehicle, during which Mr Zimba was identified in the back seat and other officers were alerted.

Before officers could interview the occupants, the vehicle sped off, leaving Masheke behind.

Police later picked him up, warned and cautioned him for abuse of authority of office, and he remains in custody. The vehicle was later found abandoned at a lodge in Highlands Township, Livingstone.

Department of Immigration Chief Public Relations Officer Namati Nshinka said investigations into the matter are continuing and that appropriate action will be taken once they are concluded.

Dr Mulenga confirmed that all other arrangements, including the participating teams, venues, prize fund and charitable component, remain unchanged.

Premier League chief says Fifa self-destructed over World Cup plan

Next year Infantino is hoping to win a fourth term as Fifa president

Premier League chief executive Richard Masters has criticised Fifa president Gianni Infantino's World Cup sell-off plan, saying the organisation has "pressed the self-destruct button" by delivering "a self-inflicted wound".

Infantino is under increasing pressure over his attempt, later abandoned, to create a new company to manage the commercial and ticketing rights of all Fifa competitions, including the World Cups, with 21% to be sold off to a private investment company.

Fifa Forward Enterprise (FFE) was aborted after widespread criticism from several confederations, led by Uefa, which has threatened a boycott of all Fifa competitions.

Masters backed the English Football Association's withdrawal of support for Infantino - and called for a new candidate for the presidency who could unify football.

"This is a problem of Fifa's making," Masters told BBC Sport.

"This is a self-inflicted wound. The organisation has pressed the self-destruct button, and the consequence of that flow now into the solutions to be that need to be found."

Masters was speaking in a wide-ranging interview before the start of the new Premier League season, which gets under way on Friday when champions Arsenal host promoted Coventry.

Last week, Fifa and Infantino were accused of breaking trust "through deception", in an open letter issued by Uefa, Concacaf and the Asian Football Confederation.

The letter, signed by the presidents and general secretaries of the three regional governing bodies, said recent controversy over the FFE proposal was fundamentally about "the integrity of the game, and the integrity of those elected to lead it".

Earlier this month, Infantino received the backing of senior executives in a meeting in Morocco. The confederations of Africa, South America and Oceania have also backed Infantino.

The English Football Association is one of a number of organisations who have withdrawn their support for Infantino - who is scheduled to stand for a fourth term as president in March - a position backed by the Premier League.

"I don't think the Fifa should be ever contemplating selling off a stake in the World Cup," Masters told BBC Sport.

"They're a not-for-profit organisation. They should really be holding that competition in trust for the future of football.

"I think it's a bad idea, and the FA have taken the right position regards to Gianni [Infantino]."

At present there is no candidate who has put their name forward to stand against Infantino, before a 18 November deadline.

While Masters would not be drawn on specific people, he did express a hope for a "unity candidate" to come forward who could bring together all federations to work together to bring positive change at Fifa.

He said: "I think an emerging unity candidate should have on his or her agenda reform of Fifa, and perhaps even reform of the president's role and how it interacts with those things."

Balogun World Cup red card suspension 'a big issue'

The recent World Cup in North America saw European champions Spain beat Argentina in the final to win the tournament.

However, it was a competition not without controversy, with one of the biggest issues surrounding the suspension of a red card to USA striker Folarin Balogun.

He was shown a straight red for a foul on Bosnia-Herzegovina defender Tarik Muharemovic as the co-hosts won their last-32 tie 2-0.

President Donald Trump asked Fifa to review the automatic one-match ban and it was subsequently suspended for a year, allowing him to play in the last-16 game against Belgium. The United States lost that match 4-1.

"We worry that about that particular episode, and of course we don't know what happens," added Masters.

"I don't understand why Fifa doesn't have a very straightforward red card review process in place, like we do in the Premier League, for example. That I think would have would have would have been much a better way to proceed.

"Generally speaking, Fifa is supposed to uphold non-political inference within the game of football. In fact, it's part of its part of its promise that it won't allow it to happen in the rest of the game. So I think it's a big issue, and it needs to be thought through properly."
